

Contents

Acknowledgments	ix
Introduction	1
I Tradition and Transmission	9
1 Early Jewish Modernity and Arendt's Rahel	11
2 Tradition and the Hidden: Arendt Reading Scholem	17
3 Transmitting the Gap in Time: Arendt and Agamben	26
II Law and Narration	39
4 "As if Not": Agamben as Reader of Kafka	41
5 Kafka, Narrative, and the Law	54
6 Kafka's Other Job: From Susman to Žižek	66
III Messianic Language	87
7 Pure Languages: Benjamin and Blanchot on Translation	89
8 Ideas of Prose: Benjamin and Agamben	103
9 Reading Scholem and Benjamin on the Demonic	114
IV Exile, Remembrance, Exemplarity	125
10 Paradoxes of Exemplarity: From Celan to Derrida	127
11 Two Kinds of Strangers: Celan and Bachmann	137
12 Exile as Experience and Metaphor: From Celan to Badiou	145
13 Winged Words and Wounded Voices: Geoffrey Hartman on Midrash and Testimony	156

Epilogue: New Angels	165
Notes	171
Bibliography	191
Index	201