

Table of Contents

Introduction	13
 Chapter One: In a Closed Circle (1903–1931)	 25
The Jewish Problem in Tsarist Russia	25
Learning One's Own Mother Tongue	28
The Earliest Years	32
God Abandoned My Old World	36
Like a Whirlwind, Like a Stream of Lava	39
Between Socialism and Zionism	42
The Central Address for the Provinces	48
A Week Without Sociocultural Activity	55
 Chapter Two: Winning over Jewish Hearts and Minds (1932–1939)	 59
Unknown Warsaw	59
In the World of Tomorrow	63
Those to Whom the Future Belongs	74
Everything Appeared So Simple	81
Reason for Fingerprinting: Communism	86
When is One of You Going to Prison?	88
Who Could Have Told Them Not to Come?	97
We are Adherents of the Comintern	102
 Chapter Three: "Liberated Brother Writers" (1939–1941)	 109
Fleeing Toward a Myth	109

Articles That They Themselves Would Not Have Endorsed	114
Writers Have it Good Here	118

Chapter Four: “Druzhba evreiskih narodov”—Friendship of the Jewish Peoples (1941–1946)	131
They Don’t Like Anything Soviet	131
Writing Tomorrow’s Poems	135
In the Footsteps of Berek Joselewicz and Ber Meisels	141
We Can’t Place a Militiaman Next to Every Jew	157
Just Wait a Little Longer	161

Chapter Five: “There Is No ‘Jewish Problem,’ There Are Only Jewish Problems” (1946–1949)	167
How Do Jews in Poland Spend Their Time These Days?	167
The Entire Jewish Population Has Abandoned the City	172
Let’s Hope Things Can Be Different in Poland	179
I Want to Work Among Jews	185
The Palestinian Illusion Becomes Reality	191
Cocreators of the Process of Jewish Culture	196
Without Culture, There Is No Socialism	199

Chapter Six: “A Model Solution to the Jewish Problem” (1950–1959)	207
The Nose of Polish Stalinism	207
None of Us Believed, But Many Pretended	211
We Have Yiddish Writers of Various Genres	217
Concrete Acts of Creativity	221
A Strange Spring	225

In Jewish Matters, We Are Always More Catholic Than the Pope	230
We Have to Let Somebody Go Too	236
Pessimism and Disappointment	241
What Did Sholem Aleichem Do Wrong?	245
Code Name: "Milieu"	252
And a Communist to Boot!	256
 Chapter Seven: The Paths Diverge (1960–1969)	 261
Written Down in a Yiddish Poem	261
The Red ONR	264
We Take Our Example from You	271
As Young as Dorian Gray	276
Jews in Poland Are Part of the Jewish People	282
An Ignominious End to Beautiful Work	289
Who Knows What a Zionist Looks Like?	294
A Zionist, but a Decent One	300
 Postscript	 307
 Abbreviations	 315
 Bibliography	 317
 Index of Names	 357